The Bishop of Orleans, who is absent from his diocese for his health, has nobly given up his episcopal palace for the use of the sufferers from the floods, and devoted a quarter of a year's income to the same purpose.

It is intimated upon good authority that the President will, in his forthcoming message to Congress, lay before that body an amendment to the Constitution similar to the one passed at the last session of Congress, with a few modifications.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 10, 1866.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

To-morrow will appear the second number of the WEERLY liews, the greatest literary, political and family weekly newspaper in the South. This number will contain "In the Dark," a short and thrilling story, complete, by CHARLES DICKENS; "A Woman," an interesting tale of Virginia life at the present time; "A Visit to Magnolia," an original article of inability to act upon the precepts of common 'A Day amid the Ruins;" a large amount of leave their names at our office before that date.

USURY LAWS.

We have been pleased to notice the action of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce upon the subject of the laws limiting the amount of interest to be taken for the use of subject could be seen for the first time without the influence of traditional projudice, it would seem strangely inexpedient; strange that, among people encouraged to the most constant commerce, there should be a restriction put upon the use of one of its most common and necessary constituents, and that while money is a necessary condition of commercial operations, one man may not take or another receive, no matter what their necessities, more than a certain arbitrary amount for the use of it.

That this provision of the law is arbitrary and unnatural is a sufficient reason of itself why it should be discontinued. Systems, to be interests to admit a question that what they ask efficient, must be free; and it is manifestly important that the system of trade, so necessary to the well being of civilized society, should be fettered by no restrictions which may impede its easy action. But there are circumstances, at present, affecting the commercial condition of our people here, which render this restriction particularly onerous. Almost completely without a medium of exchange—coin having been carried off, and Confederate currency rendered valueless by the results of the war-it was a matter of necessity that we should procure such medium, and we have little with which to do so. There was but little cotton in the country; we have no other article of export, and nothing else to offer therefor but our credit or our lands. For our lands there were few purchasers, and they could only be sold at a ruinous sacrifice-for that sum, in fact, which the few capitalists ready for such investments might have the charity to offer. Under such circumstances, it was a matter of the last importance that we should be at liberty to sell our credit. It was only in that way that many of us could take a single step in the way of business,-that plantations could be started, buildings repaired, or implements or materials for trade could be procured. It was not only the privilege of men to offer for the medium by the month of October there were four hundred and which these objects as much as they were worth, is to prevent an indefinite extension. The but it was to public interest they should do so. Legislature postponed the consideration of the There have been places cultivated upon our sea-veto message till January next. beard, within the current year, at an expend ture of $5000, upon which the product will be $20,000. There are other places which might have been cultivated, but for the want of money, upon which the results would have been the same. There have been trades started, at tant, therefore, that men should be unfettered in the use of credit. There is a general unwillingness to violate the law. Men dislike to ask, or offer, what the law will not allow, and eapital will not come to such precarious scourity; if it shall, the capitalist will be sure to ask a eaten up all the cooks and hens in the country, the premium sufficient to cover the extraordinary risk. If secure that they can enforce their contract for a higher rate of interest, the owners of money will bring it to the market in amounts sufficient to supply the want; but without that legitimate operators will be kept away, and men with abundant securities in property, enterprise and character will be left to the mercy of those who, willing to risk the chances of a legitimate business, will have only the more abundant opportunity to prey upon their neces-profits of which men have been living in comfort, with the promise of a competency, while enterprising men, without it, have been in de pendence and want, and it is eminently impor-

It is said, however, and the saying involves everything in the shape of an argument, that f men be at liberty to pay what they please for money, they will ruin themselves. But is it the office of the State to protect men from the consequences of their own judgments in the way of trade? Shall they make no bargains because they may be improvident? Shall the State issue a declaration of minority, or a commission of robols only await the return of the rainy season to lunacy, against all its people? Shall they be allowed to make no bargains of which the State may not approve? Is the State shrewder than individuals in the management of their private interests? That is not the precept of experience. Who has watched the conduct of States congratulated the Bostonians on having returned a in the management of business enterprises will be constrained to confess that they are characterized by a "plentiful lack of wisdom;" and there is scarce a measure intended to effect material interests that does not ruin the miserable victims of its benevolence. Or if it be not the purpose of the State to issue a general

commission of incapacity, is there any reason why it should be issued in this special matter?

Business Communications to Publisher of Daily as well, by giving an extravagant price for as well, by giving an extravagant price for horses, mules, implements of trade, machinery, lands and the like, which, for the want of the money, they may be compelled to buy on credit? Or if it be true that some might ruin themselves, is it not better that they should take their chances? Shall they be kept in leash for fear they may do damage ?-allowed no liberty of movement that they may not go astray? We want a community competent to the responsibities of self-direction; and it were better that half of every generation should make shipwreck of their fortunes, than that all should be kept in that state of stagnation which must result from the want of the liberty to use

There is upon this subject of money a strange great length and interest, by our head local, experience and common sense. If it were got up in the style of "Uptown Rambles," &c.; proposed that, inasmuch as our people are poor, no one shall sell them flour at more than $8 editorial matter on the political and social abarrel, or meat at more that eight cents a pound, ssues of the day, and all the latest items of whilethey might be in danger of starving withnews by mail and telegraph. It shall be the out them, it would be so unmistakably absurd cheapest, as well as the best, weekly in the that no one with "discourse of reason" would country, for it must succeed, and no pains or think of approving it. It would be evident to expense will be spared to accomplish that end. any intelligence, short of insanity, that no flour Our city subscribers, for the present, can ob- will be sold here at $8 a barrel which will cost tain them from the news boys, but after De- $15 elsewhere; that it shall be brought to us at cember 1st arrangements will be made to send all, it can only be brought at its original cost and them by regular carriers to such as desire expenses; and if sold at all, in violation of prothem, and those wishing to subscribe will please hibition, it will be sold only at costs and expenses, and an immense premium beyond, to cover the risk of violating the law. The unhappy victims of such legislative favors, therefore, would in no solitary instance take advantage from the interference, but, on the contrary, would pay for their commodities from onefourth to one-half more than they would have money. We have long felt assured that if the to pay without. If it would be so with flour, so is it also with money. As a marketable commodity, our people in many cases are obliged to have it. It will only come at its legitimate value, where its owners can enforce their contracts entered into for its use; and our poor people have the right to ask of the Legislature the charity of allowing them to take it at its worth. We heartily commend, therefore, the efforts of our townsmen who have taken the matter in hand. They have no scifish interests to advance; they have no money to offer; but only ask the liberty of buying it at its real value, and they are too well instructed of their

> WELL DONE FOR THE SOUTH CAROLINA RAIL-ROAD .- We are glan to see, by the following from the Sumter Watchman, that the South Carolina Railroad Company has taken a step n the right direction:

"We are requested by Hon. H. T. PEAKE, Superintendent of the South Carolina Railroad, to say that his line will carry cotton to New York as cheap as any other route, and if necessary to do so, will transport cotton over the South Carolina Road free of charge."

STAY LAW VETO IN MISSISSIPPI .- GOVERNOR HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, in his recent message vetoing the Stay Law passed by the State Legislature, takes the ground that the act is in violation of the State and Federal Constitutions, which are claimed to be emphatic on the point that no law shall be passed impairing the obligation of a contract. In the act in quesobligation of a contract. In the act in question, a stay is given to the debtor for the payment of the debt extending over a period of four years, and the Governor argues that if this power, thus to stay execution, exists in the Legislature, he can see no limitation to its exer-Legislature, he can see no limitation to its exercise except in legislative discretion. If it be competent to stay execution during a period of four years, it is difficult to perceive what there
